1. Strategic Review

1.1 Sub-Fund Overview

The sub-fund's investment objective is to achieve medium to long-term capital growth and a reasonable level of income by investing predominantly in open-ended funds and exchange traded funds listed on global markets. The sub-fund is actively managed, while the investment restrictions and strategies followed imply a characteristically moderate risk level. The Fund Manager develops, implements and monitors the strategic asset allocation targets while actively rebalancing the strategy to identify opportunities over the short to medium term. In identifying underlying funds and target weights, the Fund Manager considers both quantitative measures and qualitative factors.

As of the end of the first half of 2025, the sub-fund has, on a look-through basis, an equal allocation to global equity and fixed income funds, which reflects the strategic asset allocation determined by the Fund Manager. The underlying funds invest in growth and value stocks of companies, fixed income securities and a range of other securities and derivatives.

1.2 Factors Impacting Performance

The sub-fund is actively managed and invests in open-ended funds and exchange traded funds that invest in global equity and fixed income securities. The sub-fund is invested in funds listed in Ireland and Luxembourg. Furthermore, the sub-fund has an equal allocation to global equity and fixed income funds, which reflects the strategic asset allocation determined by the Fund Manager. Therefore, performance has been equally influenced by the performance of global equity and fixed income asset classes during the period.

Global macroeconomic and political events routinely impact the performance of developed and emerging markets. Both equity and fixed income markets reacted sharply to US tariff headlines in April 2025, while performance of global asset classes normalized during the second quarter. The sub-fund generated a net return of 3.2% year to date and omitted paying dividend distributions during the period.

1.3 Sub-Fund Distributions

There were no distributions during the first half of 2025.

1.4 Adherence to Investment Guidelines

The sub-fund adhered to investment guidelines during the period, and there were no material breaches recorded. In the event of any breaches, the Fund Manager will perform the necessary corrective actions to bring the sub-fund back into compliance in the most efficient manner, while taking into account the best interests of unitholders.

1.5 Material Changes in Ownership

There were no material changes in ownership of the sub-fund during the period.

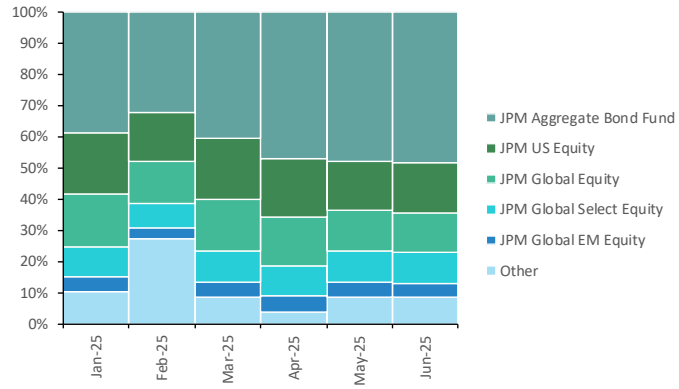

2. Sub-Fund Analysis

2.1 Sub-Fund Top Holdings

The sub-fund has an almost equal allocation to global equity and fixed income funds at present. Top holdings are principally comprised of 48% allocation to the JP Aggregate Bond fund and 16% allocation to the JP Morgan US Research Enhanced Equity ETF.

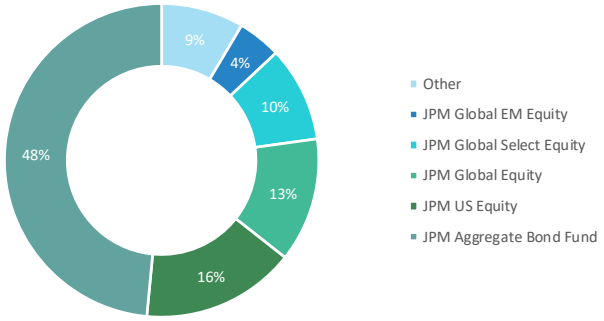

The Fund Manager follows a top-down approach in determining the appropriate target asset allocation, which is largely based on the analysis of global macroeconomic trends. This is followed by a bottom-up approach to selecting suitable securities and allocating risk. The investment process involves conducting the necessary due diligence on target funds and securities prior to capital deployment. The Fund Manager subsequently allocates risk to suitable securities depending on the adopted target asset allocation model. Risk management is later conducted on an ongoing basis to ensure that allocations remain aligned with the Fund Manager's views and overall targeted portfolio risk level. Consequently, top holdings evolve from and are a product of the recursive application of fundamental and risk analysis by the Fund Manager.

3. Market Analysis

3.1 Market Overview

Global equities posted strong gains in the first half of 2025, supported by resilient earnings, improving macro sentiment, and declining recession risks. The rally was broad-based, with both developed and emerging market equities advancing, with the latter outperforming on a relative basis. In terms of sectors, financials, communications and industrials led gains, while healthcare and consumer discretionary lagged. From a factor perspective, momentum and technology stocks outperformed.

Global bonds also performed well during the first half and were supported by peaking interest rates and moderating inflation expectations. Long-duration assets including inflation-linked bonds, global corporate credit and global treasuries performed notably well. Credit spreads tightened across both investment-grade and high-yield markets as investors rotated selectively into immediate duration bonds and credit. Additionally, emerging market local currency bonds US dollar-denominated sovereign bonds also performed well, helped by a weakening in the US dollar.

The commodity complex rose during the period, with performance led by precious and industrial metals. Gold, silver and platinum surged amid strong safe-haven demand, falling real yields, and broad US dollar weakness. Copper rose as green infrastructure and supply constraints supported prices, while energy prices were a major drag. Crude oil prices resumed a steady decline, reflecting weak global demand and ample supply.

3.2 Market Outlook

Inflation is showing encouraging signs of easing despite ongoing tariff uncertainty. Higher inventory ratios among US corporations, a cooling labor market and evidence of slowing consumer spending has helped cushion the short-term impact of tariffs. However, tariff risks could exert upward pressure on inflation in the second half. We anticipate that tariffs will dampen growth first before driving inflation higher, with price pressures are likely to intensify gradually rather than immediately.

At present, significant uncertainty surrounds US tariff policy, with recently announced rates retreating slightly but still at their highest levels since the late 1930s. Despite legal challenges, the Trump administration appears committed to its trade policy goals, particularly as it aligns these with fiscal planning. We expect uncertainty over trade and fiscal policy to weigh on the global market sentiment in the medium term.

We maintain our view that tariffs contribute to weaker economic growth before they feed into heightened inflation. We believe the Federal Reserve will likely prioritize measures to address the slowdown. Therefore, we expect the Federal Reserve will cut the policy rate by 75 basis points over the course of 2025. Meanwhile, we believe the European Central Bank is approaching the end of its easing cycle, having already implemented eight rate cuts. As for the United Kingdom, downside risks to growth have increased recently even as wage growth and inflation remain somewhat elevated. Consequently, we anticipate further easing from the Bank of England in the near term. Finally, we see the Bank of Japan staying on hold for the rest of the year, and expect two rate hikes during 2026.
